THURSDAY MORNING, MAR 10, 1864.

The Demand of the Hour

When last year Vicksburg surrendered to General Grant and Gettysburg 'grapes' were found to be sour by Lee, the Rebel Raider, a wild enthusiasm ran a neck and neck race with the glorious intelligence over the whole country. But the jubilant manifestations with which that news was received would sink into puny insignificance beside the mad rejoicings which everywhere would greet the tidings of the utter destruction of the rebellion. If to-morrow the telegraph thrilled throughout our broad domain with this short dispatch "The old Flag is again supreme!" no pen can describe, no brain conceive, the gorgeousness of the ovations in our cities or the fullness of gratitude at every hearthstone. A final and complete victory over treason is the great American desideratum. By citizens at home, by soldiers in the field, by fathers, by mothers, by sisters, by brothers, by sweethearts, by wives, by children, by everybody, it is the consummation most devoutly to be wished.

Can it be accomplished? Certainly, it is but a question of time. Aye, there's the rub: we who wish to do our whole duty as patriots must not lose sight of the fact that time is men, money and international confidence to our country—that every day the crushing of this rebellion is deferred is accompanied by its loss of a certain amount of these elements of national power, and it is not at all unlikely that we will soon need for a foreign foe all we have to spare of this.

Can it be accomplished speedily? That is the real question demanding our earnest consideration. We reply, "most certainly." "But how?" "By "a vigorous prosecution of the war,"" which by the way, is a most excellent phrase, but one that has been so shamefully misused by politicians that it has lost a large part of its natural strength and original intent. That this phrase embodies the desire of the people is evidenced by the number of demagogues who have ridden into power upon it. And here we wish to make a point. These demagogues have never been as ready as the people they represent to forget old political animosities, they have been the conservatives in our congressional halls, and [illegible] nothing Generals of our army, who have ever exerted a certain influence and have been ever seeking some way to let the rebels off easy, thus preventing in a measure the vigorous prosecution of the war."

The demand of the hour is a vigorous prosecution of the war, but it seems to us that this is no milk and water phrase, no conservative platform—in the modern acceptation of conservatism—no conciliating, compromising scheme of action, but an ultra radical platform, and the only one fit for freemen to stand upon whose rights are assailed by traitors with shrapnel and shell, with ball and bayonet. The demand of the hour is more radicalism and less squeamishness about the forfeited rights of those who care nothing at all about our rights.

However considerable the number of Democrats, there may be in the North sympathizing with the South, the large majority of our people desire nothing so much as that this rebellion be immediately crushed—they are ultra at heart on the only question of the day, if they have been misrepresented they will soon have a chance in some measure to rebuke that treachery. If Oregon wishes to do her share towards hastening the final discomfiture of treason, let her send no more conservative men to Washington, but let her rather select those men as her representatives who have made themselves obnoxious to treason by their ultra opinions and their radical opposition to everything in the shape of concession. Let us add to our watchword of "a vigorous prosecution of the war," that of "conservatism is played out."

Speech of Mr. Nesmith.

The Senators from Oregon do not often give us a chance to publish their speeches, and when they do, we cheerfully improve it, so that our readers may see how they talk. This speech is decidedly original and contains very good ideas, though its object was defeated.

Mr President, yesterday, when the amendment to repeal the $300 commutation clause which was reported by the Military Committee was before the Senate I sought the floor ineffectually in order to state my own views upon the measure, but the rigid and doubtless correct application of an inexorable rule by the Chair prevented my doing so, and I was, as it were, cut off in the flower of my youth.

Inasmuch as the pending motion brings the question again before the Senate, I now take occasion to state my objections to the commutation clause, which, in my opinion, renders the bill worse than useless. I do so, however, with a full consciousness that nothing which I can say will induce the Senate to recede from its vote of yesterday.

When the original bill sometimes called the conscription bill, was before the Senate at the last session of Congress, I was opposed to the commutation provision which released soldiers from the duty of serving in the field by the payment of the mere nominal sum of $300, and I think that the inefficiency of the draft has fully vindicated my judgment in that particular.

I had thought that the able presentations of the case by my friend, the honorable Senator from Indiana, [Mr Lane] was sufficient in itself to convince the Senate of the mischievous consequences likely to result from a perpetuation of that clause of the law, and after the rejection of his amendment, like the Senator from Missouri, [Mr Brown] I ceased to take any further interest in the bill regarding it as shorn of its best and most effective features.

This, Mr President, has been characterized as a cruel war. It is so in the sense that all wars are cruel, but its cruelty has been enhanced an hundred fold by its procrastination and want of vigor in its prosecution.

Neither Congress nor the Administration has in my opinion, had a true appreciation of the magnitude of the undertaking to subdue the rebels in arms against the legitimate authority of the Government. I have constantly entertained the idea that all the energies of the Government should be exerted in [illegible] the conflict to a speedy [illegible] for the sake of the Government [illegible] but for the sake of humanity. For this reason, sir, when our Army failed to be recruited by volunteering I urged the adoption of the only mode left to consummate that result, namely drafting, and inasmuch as we had recourse to that means of raising troops, I was anxious that it should be so enforced as to bring the largest possible number of troops into the field.

The result would have been all that we could have desired but not the bill with that single exemption clause permitting the soldier to commute his patriotism with the paltry sum of $300 instead of facing the enemy with the [illegible] and convincing argument of the bayonet. I [illegible] at times have been amused, had the subject been of a less grave nature, when listening to Senators indulging in flights of florid eloquence and urging upon us the necessity of supporting the Government, and saying that every loyal man owed it his personal service and all he had. I never for a moment supposed that all this was a mere figure of speech which meant that $300 was a sum sufficient to discharge the entire liability. Money and men are both material elements in the prosecution of a war, yet the former is worthless without the latter, and the raising of either is of itself a question of sufficient magnitude to require separate legislation.

The reduction of [illegible] and may fill your coffers but it will as certainly deplete your ranks. I believe that a rigid enforcement of the law, with a repeal of the commutation clause, would raise men sufficient to put an army upon every avenue leading to the heart of rebeldom, and crush the rebellion in the next six months. I am as thoroughly convinced that with the means which that clause furnishes to evade the service the next draft will be a greater farce than the preceding one and that the result will be a prolongation of the war for the next three and perhaps ten years.

As our already redundant currency is expanded the greater will be the facility for avoiding the duty of the soldier, and I look forward to no distant day when we shall be compelled to repeal the law in order to avoid the exhaustion of men from which to draw soldiers.

It is better to adopt a practical and efficient though it be a stringent policy, at once, which bears equally upon all, than to resort to temporary expedients which will in the end compel us to ignore the whole system, and drive us to the repeal of the law, and the consequent violation of the quasi pledged faith of the Government which has exempted so many thousand soldiers from duty.

Sir, the petitions which are sent here from the working men of the country, praying for the repeal of the commutation clause of the conscription law prove conclusively to my mind that the anxiety of the people is not to be relieved from their liability to serve as soldiers but to see the last vestige of treason crushed out and subdued until the flag of the Union waving triumphant over every foot of our soil.

I know it is said by some that if the present bill with the amendments now under consideration does not answer the purpose we can adopt some other in its place. I am tired, and the country is tired, of that temporizing policy of adopting expedients when we have a sure and certain remedy within our reach; besides, the responsibility imposed upon us is too great to be trifled with. A great and patriotic people demand at our hands that treason be suppressed and the nation restored to its integrity while we are amusing them with schemes how not to do it.

I said that we had not appreciated the magnitude of our undertaking in putting down this rebellion, and I now think it is time that we begin to look the thing earnestly in the face.

During the first six months of the war we were amused with the predictions that it was to be all over in thirty, then sixty, then ninety days, nearly a thousand days have elapsed, and two hundred thousand of our brethren have fallen, while we are here devising means to keep the residue out of the ranks.

We have raised armies just in proportion as we supposed the rebels had power to resist them, and our successes have been quite as attributable to the mismanagement of our enemy as to our own exhibition of strength, prudence, or forethought.

The war has been a chapter of accidents—I had almost said a comedy of errors. After the first Bull Run the capital was at the mercy of Beauregard, who was only restrained from occupying it by his respect for the orders of a superior.

At Antietam and Gettysburg, victory hesitated long before it perched upon our standard. At the latter battle the absence of a single regiment from the center or the faltering of one there would have rendered the last rebel charge successful, annihilated Meade and his army, placed the capital, Baltimore, and Philadelphia in the hands of the rebels, and transferred their lines to the Delaware.

In September, 1862 Kirby Smith's lines were within four miles of Cincinnati, and in July last Morgan in his raid was within eight miles of the city. There was nothing to prevent the former from taking and holding, or the latter from destroying the Queen of the West, except their ignorance of its true condition.

When I look back upon these probable contingencies it causes me to shudder, and to feel how important it is that no such terrible risks shall be assumed in the future. The only way that I see to avoid them is to dispense with commutation and exemption clauses and make our Army so powerful as to be invincible.

Twenty thousand additional men would have marched from Malvern Hill to Richmond, and the same number would have destroyed Lee's army at Antietam or Gettysburg. Ten thousand reserves at Chickamauga would have saved our right and enabled Rosecrans to destroy Bragg. Fifty thousand troops might have held Texas long ago, and cut off the principal source of supplies for the rebel army. The men to accomplish all these purposes have stood ready at your bidding, but you have only had too much modesty to demand their services, with the experience of the past before your eyes you now devise a means by which you never can get them.

I ask Senators to contemplate the prospect of the future. The great heart of the rebel States has not yet been reached by our armies. During the present winter no effort will be spared to augment their forces, the energy of despair will be bent in that direction, and in the spring, with a concentrated and well disciplined army operating upon interior lines, they will be able to hurl a combined force against either the Army of the Potomac or the Cumberland one of which, if not crushed, will be rendered inefficient for at least another year.

The present Army of the Potomac, nor any other will ever reach Richmond by the present route. It will remain an army of observation, or for the defence of Washington while your commutation clause will bring money into your Treasury from the men at home who should be approaching Richmond by the other and better route.

I know that it is a favorite theory with some that the armed resistance of the rebels must soon cease on account of the depreciation of their currency. A greater delusion was never indulged in. While it is to a certain extent true that a recognized member of the family of nations is not likely to succeed in war or prosecute it for a long period without money the history of all revolutions discloses the fact that they have been prosecuted, and in many instances successfully, with an almost entire destitution of funds. Take our own Revolution as a precedent, how many of its battles were fought after its credit was reduced as low, if not lower, than that of the Confederates?

I saw the rebel troops fight at Chickamauga with a currency worth five cents on the dollar and I thought that they stood up to it about as well as our own troops who had at least eight hundred per cent. the advantage of them on the question of finance. In a country like the rebellious State where their system of labor produces abundant supplies for an army they are comparatively independent of the outside world. What cannot be bought is seized by an arbitrary and tyrannical government. With their present resources they have the ability to resist our temporizing policy for the next ten years and to protract a war indefinitely which should have already terminated.

If the admitted power of the Government can be so exerted as to bring the war to a close within the next six months, even if it should double our present expenses, would it not be good policy to make the effort, instead of procrastinating that result for a dozen years at the present annual cost with all the threatened dangers of foreign intervention?

We know that the strict enforcement of the draft divested of the commutation clause would promptly raise all the troops we desire, and at the same time give the greatest satisfaction [illegible] the people who [illegible] the Government was in earnest [illegible] to exterminate the last vestige [illegible] the rebellion [illegible] the supremacy of the Government [illegible]

The means [illegible] supply [illegible] army we have in the greatest [illegible] people are only too anxious [illegible] You may reject their proffered [illegible] your past policy, and write upon the tombstone [illegible] the nation, "DIED OF COMMUTATION."

Execution of the Magruder Murderers

The Golden Age of last Saturday gives the following account of the conduct and punishment of the convicts at Lewiston:

The [illegible] reporter [illegible] of Howard, [illegible] and Lower [illegible] their sentence [illegible] features [illegible] which [illegible] have occupied their time in reading [illegible] books [illegible] to some extent they [illegible] the Bible. They [illegible] at all times [illegible] cheerful [illegible] with those who have [illegible] them. [illegible] have been disposed to [illegible] in some instances they have been [illegible] their [illegible] themselves [illegible] their position [illegible] prospects [illegible] at no time exhibited any great degree of dread of the [illegible] the world. They [illegible] about the character of the future [illegible] On the night of the 11th of February, just four months from the date of the murder, [illegible] Beachey [illegible] when he visited him [illegible] admitting that Magruder and party were murdered and that [illegible] was present but not a participator in the murder. He claims that he was [illegible] Howard [illegible] that all [illegible] the party [illegible] Howard, Page and Lower were [illegible] was the first he knew [illegible] party, that [illegible] in making way with the bodies as described by [illegible] of all [illegible] which they deposited in the Mint at San Francisco, was about the amount they took from Magruder, that they took some five thousand dollars more from the other parties. He also informed Beachey what disposition was made of the other money which we are not at liberty to make public. He requested that Beachey should not make his admissions public till after his death. He told a similar story to Mrs Beachey. Howard has told many tales, but all very conflicting in their nature, so much so, that Beachey could place no confidence in any of them. He has of late [illegible] more [illegible] pressed in spirits than the others. Lower [illegible] cheerful until Thursday night [illegible] disposed to speak in a jocose manner of everything connected with his situation and prospects. On that night he admitted to Beachey that the men were murdered but claimed that there was such a mystery about the whole affair that Beachey [illegible] not believe him even if he should tell the truth. He [illegible] much emotion even to tears and spoke with more apparent candor and sincerity than on any former occasion. He told Beachey that he [illegible] perfectly right in putting forth the effort he had to bring them to justice, that he had [illegible] should have been prompted to do the same under similar circumstances. He expressed no desire to live, and that his life had been one of misery for the last seven years, that he could not be happy even if he were turned loose to go out upon the world. He [illegible] mised that he would tell more to Beachey on the morning of the execution. He said that he should have a few words to say on the scaffold. Father Brouillet arrived from Walla Walla on Thursday, to act as their spiritual advisor. He spent much time with them that night, and also on Friday morning.

DAY OF EXECUTION

The morning was cloudy and windy and the streets were filled with dust making it exceedingly unpleasant. About 10 o'clock, Company D, 1st Regiment, W. T. Infantry, commanded by Lieut. Purdy arrived from Fort Lapwai to act as an escort and guard. Large numbers of persons had assembled about the Luna House, for the purpose of obtaining a view of the prisoners as they were conducted to the wagon. At half past 11 A. M., the infantry guard were properly stationed around the wagon, and, a citizens' guard conducted the three prisoners from the Luna House. The prisoners entered the wagon with a light step, and appeared to be much composed. When all was ready, the procession moved with a quick step towards the gallows which had been erected about three fourths of a mile from the town, to the south east in a small secluded valley where from the surrounding hills the view of the scaffold was all that the most curious could desire. The crowd of men was large, which moved in haste to the scene of the execution. Large numbers of Indians, of both sexes, also rushed to the hill on the west of the scaffold.

The procession arrived and the troops were duly arranged around the scaffold, and the wagon containing the prisoners was drawn up to the foot of the steps leading to the scaffold. Howard alighted and ran up the stairs with a very light step. Romain followed more slowly but firmly; Lower also moved slowly but firmly upon the scaffold. There were upon the scaffold, the Sheriff, two deputies, Mr Beachy, the citizens' guard, the reporters of the press, and Rev Father Brouillet, the Chaplain. The Chaplain engaged in prayer, wherein all the prisoners joined upon their knees. Howard then spoke to Beachy, forgiving him, and calling upon God to witness his innocence, saying further "As I expect to meet my God, I am innocent of this murder; my hands were never imbued in human blood." Howard and Romain then shook hands and smiled. Howard then said he had nothing further to say. Romain says "I am innocent of this murder." The Sheriff then read the death warrant. Romain then said "This is not a Court—it is nothing but a mob. I expect to meet my God and there have my trial. Page is guilty of the murder. He told us as to points of the murder of Magruder. I die an innocent man." He then knelt joining the Chaplain in earnest prayer. He then declared that he had nothing further to say. Lower then stepped forward to the reporter, saying, 'I am murdered. These two men (pointing to Howard and Romain) are murdered by me. I did not have a hand in this murder. Page told a great story. I could contradict the story, but it would implicate seven persons, and one who is dearer to me than life. Page has told you a great story. But, as the last words I expect to say, these men (referring to Howard and Romain) I am murdering." Romain seemed deeply affected, and said, "I am innocent of this murder." Howard then remarked to Lower, "You ought to have said this before." Lower answered, "No, I could not, as it would have implicated one dearer to me than life." Lower, turning to Romain, said, 'Forgive me, Jimmy.'

The Sheriff then adjusted the rope upon Howard, deputy Bradley upon Lower, and deputy Hall upon Romain. Lower says to Beachey "See that all is right." Romain says to Beachey, "You know, that I am innocent, what I have told you, Beachey, is true." Lower then said, 'Good bye to all: All ready! Launch your boat—it's nothing but a [illegible] slow anyhow.' Howard said, "Good-bye Jimmy." He then turned to one of the guard and asked him to remember him in his prayers.

At 28 minutes past 12 o'clock the drop fell and these three young men were sent to that 'bourne from whence no traveler returns.' Romain and Lower's necks were broken at the fall. Howard's was simply dislocated, and he struggled for some moments before life became extinct. They were placed in coffins and interred in one grave, dug but a short distance from the scaffold.

Considering the volatile disposition of the prisoners during their confinement, even up to the time of execution, the whole scene of the hanging was of much solemnity.

Lower before his death requested the Sheriff to search his pockets after he was hung, saying that he would there find a note, which he requested him to give to the reporters for the press. The Sheriff made the search and found the note in Lower's own hand writing and signed with his full name. This note is not fit for publication. It is replete with the most vulgar blasphemy in relation to the people of Lewiston and vicinity, evidently evincing his extreme depravity of mind and his utter fearlessness of solemnities which [illegible]

Everything connected with the preparation for the execution was good and every person who [illegible] conducted himself with propriety and [illegible] happened to interrupt or embarrass the progress of the solemnities.

Capt. Knox of the infantry company was sick and duly taken ill and the command devolved upon Lieut Purdy who acquitted himself with much credit on the occasion.

May this exhibition of the majesty of the law be a terror to evil doers and our highways [illegible] become hereafter safe thoroughfares for our citizens [illegible]

ASSAYS FOR THE YEAR 1863.—The amount of Assays made in the city of Portland, during the year 1863, so far as we are able to obtain the figures amount to over four million dollars, as follows:

By Wells, Fargo & Co from the 11th of June 1863 to January 1st, 1864.	$1 800 000
By Tracy & King, for the year 1863	1 542 000
By Goldsmith Bros "	1 163 731
Total	$4,505 731

Arguments like these are weighty, and they carry with them the convincing proof of the richness of the yet undeveloped mineral lands, which are tributary to Portland. During the time these Assays were being made here, the press of California, from various motives, were harmonious in their endeavors to ignore all that related to the interest of our mines, and comparatively but a few people were aware of the probable extent or richness of them. But the success of the past year has entirely changed the aspect and now by every steamer we receive papers from California filled with the most encouraging reports of the "Northern Gold Fields" and meet familiar faces of persons who left us last year, to "try their luck" in Washoe, Reese River, or elsewhere, returning to Boise, the Owyhee or other rich camps, struck in the mountains of Oregon and Idaho. Not only in regard to our mines do the leading journals of California refer, but they are also grasping after our trade, evidently showing that the "Web feet" are somebody, and worth looking after in a commercial and financial point of view. One year has been sufficient to bring about such a change, and while discoveries are constantly being made, what must we expect at the close of another year, while everything wears a look of encouragement? We must all prosper alike, the present season, at home and in the mines.

THE OREGON PENITENTIARY.—We were shown through the various departments of the State Penitentiary, yesterday afternoon, by Mr Gardner, keeper. The establishment is in the most excellent condition, clean and healthy. At present there are thirty two convicts, most of whom, in fair weather, are at labor on the outside, eight are engaged in the Prison shops, in the manufacture of saddles, aparajoes, cinches, etc., and two in the culinary departments. But two prisoners are on the sick list. The present management of the Penitentiary has existed about fifteen months, and a marked change is apparent. During that time not a prisoner has marred his irons, in an attempt to escape from them, and but one Julien Ziena has escaped. The system of working the prisoners outside is not so profitable as [illegible] inside work would be if proper arrangements could be made for their accommodation [illegible] existing circumstances it would [illegible]

EXCURSION TO VANCOUVER.—St Patrick's Day, the [illegible] promises to be well remembered [illegible] city. The Hibernian Benevolent Society [illegible] Portland have chartered the steamer John H Couch for an excursion to Vancouver, and a pleasant time is in anticipation.

RECORDER'S COURT.—T[illegible] Gibson and Rich[illegible] Mine were each fined for being drunk [illegible] disorderly yesterday, they gave collateral [illegible] City vs John Reynold, continued [illegible] o'clock this morning when the Court will [illegible] upon it, and the defendant taken before Judge Shattuck on a writ of habeas corpus.

ARRIVAL OF THE STEAMER.—The Panama arrived from San Francisco direct this morning at 3 o'clock. We were unable to get her passenger list. Our news by telegraph is [illegible] days later than she brings. She is crowded with passengers.

LOSS OF HAY.—A scow loaded with hay was sunk in the Willamette a few days since, near the point of an island, above the city and several bales floated away from the wreck yesterday.

MORE money was received by the committee on the celebration than they expended, and it is proposed to contribute the remainder to the Sanitary Commission. A happy thought, truly.

FOUND.—A lady's fur victorine was found on the balcony of the Pioneer Hotel, at the termination of the celebration, Tuesday evening. The owner will find it at the Pioneer, by calling upon the Clerk, Mr. Whitehouse.

FLOUR.—There is quite a stir in commercial circles in relation to flour. The prospect of an advance occasioned several lively transactions yesterday.

THE steamer Hunt carried sixty tons of freight, 25 passengers, seven wagons, and five horses, to the Cascades yesterday. The Julia carried 150 head of stock.

THE work of finishing up the new Church edifice of the Presbyterian Society is rapidly progressing.

CITY MARSHAL.—We understand the City Recorder will be a candidate for Marshal at the ensuing Spring election.

TREASURE.—Mr Holland came down the Columbia yesterday, in charge of the express, bringing with him $15,000 in treasure.

Columbia County Mass Convention.

At a mass meeting of the Union citizens of Columbia county, held at the School House in St. Helens, on the 5th day of March, A. D., 1864, as per previous notice given, the following business was disposed of. James G. Hunter being called to the chair and B. M. Watts elected secretary. The chair stated briefly the object of the meeting.

The following resolution was offered by C. G. Caples and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That we heartily invite all men to participate in this meeting, regardless of political views, who are in favor of the administration, a vigorous prosecution of the war, the President's Emancipation Proclamation, until peace is finally established in our distracted country, it being impossible to support the Government, and sustain the war, and at the same time oppose the administration in its war measures.

It was moved and carried, that the meeting in its selection of delegate and committeemen, be governed by the two-third rule, and vote by ballot. T. S. Trevett and F. N. Gorig were appointed tellers.

Upon the second ballot for delegate, to attend the Union State Convention, C. G. Caples was unanimously elected as said delegate.

The following resolution was offered by B. M. Watts, and unanimously adopted:

Resolved, That our delegate to the Union State Convention be, and is hereby instructed to vote in said Convention, for no man, unless he is of known integrity, of sound Union sentiments, and a firm supporter of the Administration in all its measures for the suppression of the present rebellion.

Upon the vote being taken to fill the vacancies in County Committee, Judge B. D. Stevens and B. M. Watts were duly elected, and by vote said county committee were instructed to act as a corresponding committee.

Upon motion it was ordered that the minutes of this meeting be sent to the WEEKLY OREGONIAN for publication. After a friendly exchange of opinions upon various matters the meeting adjourned sine die.

JAMES HUNTER, Chairman.
B. M. WATTS, Secretary.

WALLA WALLA ITEMS. — The following items are from the Washington Statesman of the 5th instant:

FROM FRASER RIVER.—From Dr. E. Thibodo, who left Fraser River on the 8th January, we obtain the following: The winter on Fraser river, and between here and there, was been less severe than usual. The Doctor left the Forks of St. Nicholas Feb. 6th, with a pack train of mules and arrived at Wallula on the 29th. The miners have no high hopes of success the coming season, and the majority of them talk of leaving for Boise in the spring. The Cariboo country is generally regarded as "played out," and but few talk of going there.

PACK TRAINS.—Three pack trains, two of 70 mules each and one of 90, from Fraser river, arrived here this week. These mules were purchased in that country and brought down to be used in packing to the Boise mines.

NEW TOWN.—A new town site is being surveyed at the Snake River Ferry, at the mouth of the Palouse. If the Kootenai mines prove to be as extensive as they promise, the town will become a place of some importance, situated as it will be on the wagon road to that country and Colville. It is the nearest point to the mines from steamboat navigation.

BOISE STAGE LINE.—The first stage for Boise will leave this city about Thursday next.

FOR KOOTENAI.—A party of fifteen men left this city on Monday for the Kootenai mines.

The Story of a Necktie.

A CASE OF CIRCUMSTANTIAL EVIDENCE.

The stages were crowded, and it was very dark on the morning that I left Virginia City, Nevada Territory, and the long and tedious passage to California was anything but agreeable to me. Daylight, however, soon peeped through the window-panes, and I observed that a gentleman who sat directly opposite had his eyes riveted on me, and the singular earnestness of his searching glance, together with the trembling quiver of his lips, caused me to feel somewhat uneasy, and suspicions of foul play, and perhaps murder, crowded my imagination, and overwhelmed me with fear.

Murder and robbery had been committed in the Territory. Stages had been robbed of their treasure, and travelers had been murdered by "Knights of the road." Was my stage companion one of this class—and might not a majority of the passengers be his confederates? Such a thought passed my brain, and held me spell-bound to the mystery. We had proceeded at a rapid speed over the road for three hours, and during the whole time, the strange person had not turned his eyes from me. The coach now stopped at the station for changing animals, and I felt somewhat relieved from my terrible situation. I should have certainly refused to ride further in that stage, had there been a public house kept on the premises. On learning to the contrary, I sought the driver, and implored for an outside seat, offering to pay double fare for such a privilege. None of the passengers would yield their seat, however, and I was forced to resume the same position as before. "All aboard!" shouted the driver, and again we started over the road at break-neck speed. I now thought of a plan to evade the scrutiny of the stranger, and took from my pocket a newspaper, which I held before my face, but I could not read. The horrifying truth of how utterly I was in his power continued to increase, as occasionally I would glance slyly at him from the side of my paper, and find him still persistently gazing upon me.

"Would you be so kind as to change places with me, sir," he asked of a person who occupied the same seat with myself.

"Certainly, sir," replied the person thus addressed, and in a moment he was at my side.

Quenchless horror now seized me; I would have uttered a cry, but it froze upon my lips. I would have jumped from the coach, but death from a broken neck stared me in the face. Visions of cold steel flitted before me—my paper rattled in the trembling grasp which held it, and I dared not lift my eyes!

"Pardon me, my friend," said the person now at my side, "I have a favor to ask of you."

The gentle manner in which he spoke, instantly relieved me from the stupidity into which I had fallen.

"With pleasure, sir," I half stammered, half answered, "I am at your service, sir."

He continued: "I am deeply interested in the necktie which you wear; it reminds me of circumstances connected with the past ten years of my life."

The mystery was solved; I had made a fool of myself by imagining every thing that was bad in a person who only admired my necktie, and I must acknowledge I was ashamed of myself.

"Indeed," I rejoined, "I do not know of any peculiar attraction attached to it."

"No, only that I had one exactly like it some years ago, the possession of which caused me to be convicted and sentenced to death for the crime of murder," he resumed.

"Possible," I exclaimed, "and you escaped."

"Yes, and I would like very much to relate the whole story to you, but it would be a tedious undertaking at this time, and beside, I intend that it shall be published some time hence, as a curious coincidence in the episodes of life."

Capital, I thought, and here is a chance for a sensation story.

"But can you not appoint some time and place where it would be convenient for you to write the story?" I urged.

"Yes, on one condition."

"Name it."

"That you will sell me that necktie, and I will pay you more than it cost you."

I took the article from my neck, and placed it in his hand.

"Now, what did it cost?" he asked, drawing a handful of coin from his pocket.

"Oh, never mind; you can procure another for me when we arrive at our destination," I returned.

"Very well; my name is   I reside at Virginia City, and when you return, call at the Gould and Curry mill, and I will relate to you a case of circumstantial evidence which mirrors the dark chapters of my life."

* * * * * * *

On my return to Virginia City, I lost no time in seeking my friend, and he conducted me to a neat and tasty cottage, where on entering I was introduced to his wife, who received me with great kindness, and extended to me the hospitalities of her home.

"Now," said my friend, drawing his chair close to the fire, "I will tell you the story which I promised you.

"Some twelve years ago it was my misfortune to become an orphan, and being without any near relatives, I was forced out into the world to seek a livelihood among strangers. I was nineteen at the time of my parents' death, and we had lived in the city of Boston for a number of years. Knowing it would be useless for me to find steady employment in a large commercial city, I packed all the worldly goods I possessed into a bundle, and swinging the same on my back started for the villages of western Massachusetts determining to seek a situation on a farm. I traveled for three days, and on the fourth I reached the village of   , in Berkshire county, and hired out for ten dollars per month. The person who hired me we will call Farmer Watson, and his farm was the most extensive in those parts, situated half a mile from the village.

"Beside myself there were some eight others employed, and among them a young man about my age, called Harry. Harry was apparently a clever sort of a chap, and we soon became great friends, so much so that we were most constantly together.

"We went to the village each Saturday night, and as Harry had worked for Watson nearly a year, of course he was acquainted with all the pretty girls in the village. Now there is no young man of good sense but what will love a beautiful girl, and Harry, thinking he had good sense, loved Mabel Story, for she was the very ideal of his fancy.

"'The course of true love never run smooth,' say many, and it could be well applied to Harry's case.

"We went together to see Mabel, but the green monster which has brought many hearts to grief, disturbed Harry so much that he left me master of the field. From this time he began to grow cold and sullen toward me, and harsh words and sometimes blows passed between us.

"The father of Mabel, learning the cause, forbade Harry from visiting his house. Saturday night came again, and just as I was about departing for the village, one of the men called me aside and stated that Harry had threatened in his presence to interfere with my weekly visits to the house of Story, and intimated that there would be trouble on the road that night. I had no fears of Harry's idle threats, however, for I felt that I was a match for him under any circumstances.

(To be concluded.)

A ROMANTIC LAWSUIT.—A case almost of romantic incident has recently been decided by the Supreme Court of this Commonwealth. One of the members of a late well-known firm in San Francisco, purchased an estate with money which he had secretly and fraudulently abstracted from the funds of the company. On the 11th of April, 1853, his wife died, on the 24th of June following he addressed a letter to a lady of Massachusetts, offering himself in marriage, and informing her that she might regard the estate he had purchased as her homestead; "and I trust," he added, "it will be a very dear spot to you, the same as it was to your dear aunt Sarah, and the children of mutual love."

His lady accepted a deed of the place and promised to marry the grantor, but the marriage was prevented by his death in Oregon, where he had gone on business. Meanwhile, the firm in San Francisco became insolvent and brought a suit in equity to recover this estate, which has been purchased with partnership funds, that they might apply the avails toward the payment of their creditors. The argument was, that the estate, having been conveyed as a mere gift, without any consideration, might be recovered.

But the Court decided that the conveyance was for a perfectly valid consideration, namely, a promise of marriage. A woman who has voluntarily made an agreement to marry, say the Court, cannot without indelicacy, and so not without exposing herself to unfavorable observation and to some loss of public favor and respect, seek elsewhere, except for good and substantial reasons for withdrawing from an engagement by which she has bound herself, for preferment in marriage; and thus her promise and agreement to marry a particular person essentially change her condition in life. A legal contract and promise made in good faith to marry another must, therefore, like an actual marriage, be deemed to be a valuable consideration for the conveyance of an estate, and will justly entitle the grantee to hold it against subsequent purchasers or the creditors of the grantor.—Boston Advertiser.

INDUCED by the extensive sale and universal popularity of Hoofland's German Bitters (purely vegetable), hosts of ignorant Quacks and unscrupulous adventurers, have opened upon suffering humanity the flood-gates of Nostrums in the shape of poor Whisky, vilely compounded with injurious drugs and christened Tonics, Stomachics and Bitters.

Beware of the innumerable array of Alcoholic preparations in plethoric bottles and big bellied kegs, under the modest appellation of Bitters, which instead of curing, only aggravate disease, and leave the disappointed sufferer in despair.

Hoofland's German Bitters!

Are not a new and untried article, but have stood the test of fifteen years trial by the American public; and their reputation and sale are not rivalled by any similar preparation.

The proprietors have thousands of letters from the most eminent

CLERGYMEN,
LAWYERS,
PHYSICIANS
CITIZENS,

Testifying of their own personal knowledge, to the beneficial effects and medical virtues of these Bitters.

ATTENTION, SOLDIERS!

AND THE FRIENDS OF SOLDIERS.

We call the attention of all having relations or friends in the army to the fact that "HOOFLAND'S German Bitters" will cure nine-tenths of the diseases induced by exposures and privations incident to camp life. In the lists, published almost daily in the newspapers, on the arrival of the sick, it will be noticed that a very large proportion are suffering from debility. Every case of that kind can be readily cured by Hoofland's German Bitters. Diseases resulting from disorders of the digestive organs are speedily removed. We have no hesitation in stating that, if these Bitters were freely used among our soldiers, hundreds of lives might be saved that otherwise will be lost.

We call particular attention to the following remarkable and well authenticated cure of one of the nation's heroes, whose life, to use his own language, "has been saved by the Bitters:"

PHILADELPHIA, August [illegible]

Messrs. Jones & Evans.—Well, gentlemen, your Hoofland's German Bitters has saved my life. There is no mistake in this. It is vouched for by numbers of my comrades, some of whose names are appended, and who were fully cognizant of all the circumstances of my case. I am, and have been for the last four years, a member of Sherman's celebrated battery, and under the immediate command of Captain R. B. Ayres. Through the exposure attendant upon my arduous duties, I was attacked in November last with inflammation of the lungs, and was for seventy two days in the hospital. This was followed by great debility, heightened by an attack of dysentery. I was then removed from the White House, and sent to this city on board the steamer State of Maine, from which I landed on the 28th of June. Since that time I have been about as low as one could be and still retain a spark of vitality. For a week or more I was scarcely able to swallow anything, and if I did force a morsel down, it was immediately thrown up again.

I could not even keep a glass of water on my stomach. Life could not last under these circumstances; and, accordingly, the physicians who had been working faithfully, though unsuccessfully, to rescue me from the grasp of the dread Archer, frankly told me they could do no more for me, and advised me to see a clergyman, and to make such disposition of my limited funds as best suited me. An acquaintance who visited me at the hospital, Mr. Frederick Steinbron, of Sixth below Arch Street, advised me, as a forlorn hope, to try your Bitters, and kindly procured a bottle. From the time I commenced taking them the gloomy shadow of death receded, and I am now, thank God for it, getting better. Though I have taken but two bottles, I have gained ten pounds, and I feel sanguine of being permitted to rejoin my wife and daughter, from whom I have heard nothing for eighteen months: for, gentlemen, I am a loyal Virginian, from the vicinity of Front Royal. To your invaluable Bitters I owe the certainty of life which has taken the place of vague fears—to your Bitters will I owe the glorious privilege of again clasping to my bosom those who are dearest to me in life.

Very truly yours, ISAAC MALONE.

We fully concur in the truth of the above statement, as we had despaired of seeing our comrade, Mr. Malone, restored to life.
